The Betty Foy Sanders Department Of Art presents

Allison Tierney's 'The Things We Keep'

Center for Art and Theatre,
Contemporary Gallery

On Display

Feb 23 - March 25

ARTISTS' TALK

TUES, Feb 23
5 - 6
Visual Arts Building,

Room 2071

Allison Tierney's The Things We Keep employs found materials and non-traditional applications of paint to question structure, material integrity, consumerism, D-I-Y, and the throwaway culture. Her honest use of materials and abstracted brushwork allows these objects to exist where they are—self-referential, notating their original purpose.

Tierney's project is made possible by an Ella Fountain Pratt Emerging Artists Grant from the Durham Arts Council with support from the North Carolina Arts Council, a division of the Department of Cultural Resources.

All events are free and open to the public.

Brooke Fremeau, a current M.F.A. Graphic Design candidate, has created a 360-degree corporate identity as her thesis. Her potential startup is called Zoetic, and her exhibition includes video, books, large-scale signage, a mobile app, a website, and screen printed T-shirts. Each element, or touchpoint, facilitates a gateway between the consumer and the company, strengthening brand presence and recognition.

Events are free and open to the public.
